Continuation of 3. NOTE: The proposed Claim amendments to Claims 7, 16 and 19 present a new issue that would require further consideration. As to the argument that Kanno et al. fails to disclose a record hiding and unhiding means for selecting at least one but not all of the records to be hidden and unhidden from display on the screen the examiner disagrees. This feature is shown by the operation of the "+/-" interface. Records that have additional contents have a hiding and unhiding means and one, but not all, can be expanded by clicking on a particular record's "+/-" icon. Furthermore, records that do not have the other records withing do not have the means for hidding and unhiding. In response to the argument that Khan does not teach a searchable database the examiner responds as follows: the limitation in the claims that is taught by Khan is "a means for searching on at least one term in a displayed one of said fields" or records as in Claim 11. Furthermore, Khan teaches a "searching of bookmarks in a user's online bookmark account" which reads as a database and searching fields Khan calls "search areas" that are displayed. In response to the argument that Khan does not teach editable fields, the examiner notes that there is nowhere in the rejection that Khan is relied upon to teach this limitation.
